

KARINA VISSONOVA is a researcher and educator focused on sustainability. Founder of the non-profit Institute of Advanced Design Studies, an independent research institute, she directs research on future sustainable societies and the evolution of education. With a career spanning close to three decades, Karina has been driving innovation in product and business development, education, community development, and multidisciplinary design projects. She has taken roles of a developer, manager, strategist, and board member, collaborating with manufacturers, architects, engineers, designers, and artists.

Karina holds a Ph.D. in Design from The Royal Danish Academy of Fine Arts, with a specialisation in philosophy of design. She was a guest Ph.D. researcher at the Delft University of Technology. Karina holds MSc in intercultural management.

Karina lectures at the Moholy-Nagy University of Art and Design in Budapest and holds membership in the World Futures Studies Federation. Karina is also a guest lecturer, speaker, and an author. She has published academic papers and contributed book chapters. In addition, she has published two books through her research institute. Her focus areas are philosophy of design, with a particular focus on sustainability, future societies, and the future of design education.

