

PÁL BÓDAY is a statistician with extensive experience in statistics on indicators and indicator systems such as Sustainable Development, he is working at the Hungarian Central Statistical Office for 24 years. Currently he is serving as the Advisor to the President at the Hungarian Central Statistical Office.

He is experienced in compilation of various statistics, including those related to environment and environmental accounts, energy, climate, spatial statistics and sustainable development among others.

He is a member of various international expert groups, including the UN Expert Group on Environmental Statistics and the UN Inter-Agency Expert Group on Sustainable Development Goals hence he can be considered as an expert with valuable insights into international good practices, standards, and strategic development goals within the statistical sector and beyond.

He has participated in several research projects, mainly on indicators and indicator systems and satellite accounts.

